

Will there be a second corona wave?

Will the virus spread even faster than at the beginning in March and will we have another lockdown? The experts fear a new corona outbreak and want to make stricter rules.

by Aurelian Schaefer

After a two months lock down in Germany the numbers of corona infections went down and many strict rules were then loosened.

But since the end of the summer vacation when a lot of people came back from their holidays, the numbers of the virus infections are increasing again.

During the summer vacation many people used the advantage of the loosened rules to meet for celebrations, large groups came together for family celebrations such as wedding parties or birthday parties. Especially young people who do not care so much about the precaution corona rules. They wanted to meet their friends as they used to do. They often don't keep the necessary distance and think the virus is not dangerous anymore, because the number of infections has fallen, many thought that the virus could no longer spread as quickly, because fewer people were infected than in the beginning of the pandemic.

Influence of the virus on economy and schools

For many companies and the economy it has been good, that the rules have been eased, because they lose less money. Many people have lost their jobs and they can now look for a new job again. So on one hand it is good, that the rules are more loose and eased, but on the other hand it's also dangerous. A few weeks ago the schools reopened with major precautions for example the washing of hands before classes and the wearing of masks at all times. You can only briefly remove the mask in class, if you want to drink. In your break it is also allowed to eat with the necessary distance to others. It is obviously uncomfortable for many students, but it helps to protect us all.

The number of corona infections are going down again, but that doesn't mean that the virus is not dangerous anymore nor can we be relaxed, too.